"The title of the world's first Guild Wars title is ambitious, but it's also entirely fitting. When you start exploring the universe that developer Arena Net has created, you begin to feel like you've found yourself alone on a large island and that you're looking for a way out. The beginning of the game is a bit confusing, and it takes some time to figure things out, but once you reach level 10, you'll realize you're on a giant plane filled with countless wonders and opportunities. The thing is, Arena Net, despite its best intentions, has an extremely bad habit of choosing the best mechanics they can come up with for their games, which is why the game is originally a bit difficult to understand. When you reach 10th level and discover that you can combine elemental magic to create special attacks that can be used in combat, the game becomes incredibly fun, and the graphics improve exponentially." "I felt like I played this game because the only other game that could remotely compare to Guild Wars was Dungeon Siege, and I really enjoyed that game. The one big thing that I didn't like in the second installment is that they added a new expansion pack called Wings of the Goddess. In this expansion, they added another character class called the Light Knight, which basically has a high defense/health, but low attack power. I'm a huge RPG fan, so I really wanted a party with more defense classes like myself, but most of my friends I play with just opted for the Light Knight, which really limited my enjoyment of the game." "This is the official Dungeons & Dragons game based on the Guild Wars 2 video game. It has the very appealing combination of being a Dungeons & Dragons game and being based on a video game. The artwork is definitely very impressive and the book is full of gorgeous images. This is certainly a book that will be playable anytime, anywhere." "World-building is handled well by Arena Net. In the sense that they have crafted a well-rounded, accessible fantasy world that is both fully developed and multi-faceted. They went the extra mile in making the different tiers and zones of the world interesting and engaging.

El FuenteFri, 10 Feb 2015 11:35:26 +0000 Entertainment BlogWed, 25 Jul 2015 20:47:09 +0000>A new beer from the Lagunitas brewery has been revealed and is on its way to the shops across Australia. The brewery has been hard at work to produce Hoppy New Arrivals, which is their annual release of beers that are harder to find and just a few weeks old. US hopheads will be familiar with the beers, including the Citra, Mosaic and Nelson Sauvin, but the variations of flavours and aromas offered, not to mention the bottle design is enough to captivate a beer fan. The most notable new arrival is set to be Cascara IPA, a Wheat Beer that has been dry-hopped exclusively with Australian wine-hopped Cascade hops. Surprisingly, the 50 hectoliter main carbonator has been filled to capacity with 750 liters of brewed water, providing a strong and pungent beer that should challenge those relying on stronger 'table stock' along with thirst. The beer features the same luxurious, balanced complexity and intensity, with the sweetness of the wheat blending seamlessly with the unique new notes. Cascara IPA will be available in limited quantities through Bottles of Bliss in California, Whole Foods in Seattle and the San Francisco Bay region, and retailers across the country and Australia. For more information on Cascara IPA or
